RUNAWAY TEAM

Broke the Monotony Thursday and Scared Children.

Thursday was indeed a dull day and not a ripple of excitement broke the monotony until about 8:45 p. m., when a pair of mules attached to a wagon rushed down Virginia street. Two children, too small to tell who they were, were in the wagon, and the crowd which gathered round the wagon after the runaway team had been stopped at 10th street by Sam West, didn't know who the children were or where the parents might be found. It was thought that the third child, who had jumped from the wagon had wandered out of town or had been injured, but the father of the children finally showed up and dissipated that apprehension. The owner of the team, a mover, had stopped at Crab Orchard pond to camp for the night and the children were in the wagon when the team started. Nobody was injured, no damage sustained and the excitement was soon over.

The Nashville Board of Education announces that it will not appoint any Northern negroes to positions in the colored schools, preferring Southern bred teachers.
